THE U. S. NAVY.

Synopsis of the Annual Report of Secretary Gideon Welles.

The annual report of the Hon. Gideon Welles, Secretary of the Navy, shows the present naval force, the different squadrons and the vessels attached thereto, the injury and destruction of vessels by earthquakes, the reduction of force in navy yards, the progress of the North Pacific, the iron clads and wooden ships, and contains the amount of expenditure for the past fiscal year and estimates for the next. It also has chapters devoted to the reports of the several Bureaus of the Department. One of the most interesting features of the report is the account of the extended tour of Admiral Paraguet, which covers several pages. There are also reports from several officers of the navy, in regard to the terrible earthquake in Peru. The exhibit of the naval force contains the following information:

The number of vessels in squadron service, as cruisers, torpedo boats, and auxiliaries, is 42, carrying 111 guns, a reduction during the year of 14 vessels, carrying 96 guns. The number of vessels of all descriptions in use as cruisers, storeships, receiving ships, tugs, and the like, is 81, carrying 693 guns, a reduction from last year of 22 vessels, carrying 305 guns. The total number of vessels borne upon the navy list is 306, carrying 1,743 guns, a reduction during the year of 17 vessels, carrying 136 guns. The following figures exhibit the present employment and condition of the naval force. Cruising vessels in squadron service, 35, 356 guns; vessels returning from squadrons, 3, 34 guns; storeships for squadrons, 4, 31 guns; special and lake service, 3, 19 guns; apprentice ship, 1, 11 guns; practice vessels, and in use at Naval Academy, 10, 115 guns; receiving ships, 6, 6 guns; quaters for officers, League Island and Marine Barracks, Norfolk, 2, 27 guns; tugs at Navy Yard and stations, 1, 11 guns; tugs, 18 guns; total in use, 81, 693 guns; iron-clad vessels laid up, 4, 107 guns; iron-clad vessels not completed, 5, 18 guns; steam sloops not completed, 10, 253 guns; line-of-battle ships not completed, 80 guns; other vessels laid up for repairs, fitting for sea, and for sale, 57, 592 guns; total number of vessels in all descriptions in the navy, 306, 1,743 guns.

The organization of the squadrons remains essentially the same as when the last annual report was made. Some changes of commanding officers and of vessels have taken place, and the force of each squadron has in consequence of the limited number of vessels allowed by the act of the 17th of June last, been necessarily reduced. The Secretary says that if our commerce and ship interests have not recovered from the depression consequent upon the war, it is from no inattention or neglect on the part of the Navy. Since the squadrons were reorganized our countrymen and their interests abroad have been as vigilantly guarded and protected as ever, and at every accessible point of our former policy, we have been the power of the Department to have one or more of our naval vessels visit annually every commercial port where American capital is employed, and that a maintenance should not be long allowed to decay in the vicinity of every merchant ship that might need assistance or protection. To accomplish this purpose and meet the requirements of the Department great activity and vigilance were necessary on our limited navy, numbering 306 vessels, less than one-fourth the effective force of any one of the principal maritime powers. Yet the work has been performed with energy and zeal, and the views of the Department well sustained.

Admiral D. G. Farragut, who was in command of the Squadron of the Atlantic at the date of the last report, returned to New York in the flagship on the 10th of November, leaving the squadron in temporary charge of Commodore A. M. Pennek.
